When disaster strikes, animals are often the first to respond. Search and rescue dogs, trained to detect the scent of survivors trapped under rubble or lost in the wilderness, have saved countless lives.

"Animals at Work" introduces us to extraordinary dogs like Bretagne, who helped locate survivors after the 9/11 attacks, and Luna, a search and rescue dog who has participated in over 100 missions.

Animals have an uncanny ability to detect diseases at their earliest stages, even before humans can. Medical detection dogs, trained to identify the scent of cancer, diabetes, and other illnesses, are revolutionizing the way healthcare is delivered.

In "Animals at Work," we explore the groundbreaking work of Dr. Cynthia Otto and her team, who have trained dogs to detect prostate cancer with 99% accuracy.

Animals: Our Educators

Animals can also be incredible educators. Therapy horses, for example, are used to help children develop physical, emotional, and social skills. Horses provide a safe and non-judgmental environment where children can learn about empathy, communication, and trust.

"Animals at Work" highlights the remarkable work of organizations like Saddle Up! Riding for the Disabled, which provides therapeutic horseback riding programs to individuals with disabilities.
