The Art Forms

The DC Street Sticker Expo is a melting pot of artistic styles and techniques, reflecting the boundless imagination of its participants. From intricate wheatpastes and meticulously designed screenprints to playful stickers and subversive stencils, the expo showcases the full spectrum of street art's expressive possibilities.

Wheatpastes

Wheatpastes, a classic form of street art, involve spreading a paste made from wheat flour and water onto a surface, then adhering a paper print to it. Artists create bold and eye-catching visuals with this technique, often featuring vibrant colors and thought-provoking imagery that challenges societal norms or reflects personal experiences.

Screenprints

Screenprints offer a versatile method for artists to produce multiple copies of their designs on various materials. Using a mesh stencil and ink, screenprints allow for intricate details and rich color combinations, making them a popular choice for political or activist messages that resonate deeply with passersby.

Stickers

Stickers are a staple of street art, offering a simple yet effective way for artists to leave their mark on the urban landscape. From playful doodles and witty slogans to subversive imagery and abstract designs, stickers bring a touch of whimsy and humor to the streets, engaging viewers with their compact and often unexpected messages.

Stencils

Stencils are a powerful tool for creating impactful street art. Artists cut designs into sheets of cardstock or metal, then spray paint over the stencils to create crisp lines and bold shapes. Stencil art often conveys poignant messages or conveys social commentary, capturing attention with its simplicity and directness.
