The 22nd Michigan Infantry emerged as a formidable force in the Union Army, leaving an indelible mark on the annals of military history. Raised in the autumn of 1862, the regiment comprised over 900 men from across the state of Michigan, united by a common cause and unwavering determination.

From the outset, the 22nd Michigan Infantry faced arduous trials and relentless battles. They fought valiantly at Stones River, Tullahoma, and Hoover's Gap, proving their mettle in the face of fierce opposition.

The Road to Chickamauga

The regiment's most pivotal moment came during the grueling Battle of Chickamauga, one of the bloodiest battles of the Civil War. As part of the Union Army's XIV Corps, the 22nd Michigan Infantry found themselves at the heart of the conflict.

On September 19, 1863, the regiment faced an overwhelming Confederate assault. Despite being outnumbered and outgunned, the 22nd Michigan Infantry stood their ground with unwavering resilience. Their unwavering bravery and tactical ingenuity played a crucial role in repelling the enemy advance.

Beyond Chickamauga: A Legacy of Valor

Veterans of the 22nd Michigan Infantry honoring their fallen comrades

The 22nd Michigan Infantry's legacy extended far beyond the battlefield of Chickamauga. They continued to serve with distinction in subsequent campaigns, including the Atlanta Campaign and Sherman's March to the Sea.

After the war, many members of the regiment returned home as honored veterans, carrying with them the memories of their heroic service and the bonds they had forged on the battlefield.
